

Interview Tips

Get to know Schlumberger

Learn as much as possible about the oil and gas industry and about Schlumberger by reading news and other information on www.slb.com and careers.slb.com. Resources, such as the Schlumberger Life magazine and The Insider's Guide to the Energy Industry, will help you prepare for the interview so that you can ask our recruiters informed questions.

Prepare for your first Schlumberger interview

Remember, our recruiters have all been there. We know how uncomfortable interviewing can be, especially when someone goes into details about your resume or application. Relax, and you'll do just fine.

We are trying to get to know you better, so we will need your help. Be sure to express your strengths and skills clearly. You will also want to explain the areas you feel you need to develop. Don't be afraid to share that with us. We know you don't know everything, but we want to ensure that you have the capacity to learn. At Schlumberger you never stop learning.

An interview is a two-way communication, and as much about you getting the information you would like as about us getting to know you better. Schlumberger has a very distinct culture and clear values. It is important to find out if it is an environment you would feel comfortable in and enjoy.

First interviews usually last about an hour. Second interviews usually last all day.

During the interview

Listen well. Pay attention to the questions asked and make sure you give concise answers.

Be honest. Nobody's going to ask you if you have 20 years of experience. We know that you are just graduating from school. Simply emphasize your strong points for our benefit.

Be direct, confident, and comfortable. If you don't understand a question, ask to have it repeated.

Most importantly, be yourself. Best of luck with the interview!
